ROBBERS OF THE MAIL.

Two persons were yesterday evening examined before Alderman BARTRAM, who had been arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the late robbery of the mail.—They were endeavouring to procure money for a post note of the Bank of the United States. Mr. DUCKER a broker to whom they applied for the purpose, suspecting them, gave immediate information to Mr CHESTER BAILEY, the spirited and enterprising contractor for the conveyance of the mail, who caused them to be arrested. They call themselves WILLIAM WOOD and JAMES DAVIS.—Davis says that Wood offered him a suit of clothes if he would exchange the note. A pistol was found upon Wood, which Mr. Bailey recognizes as the fellow of one found at the place where the robbery was committed: but he refused to account for the manner in which he became possessed of it, or to answer any important interrogatories. He alledges that he has been for some time at lodgings in this city, but refuses to state were those lodgings are.---They were both committed for further examination, which is to take place before the Mayor this day.

Phil. Union.

On the 17th inst. after a protracted debate, resolutions were adopted by a considerable majority in the House of Representatives of the United States, in committee of the whole, declaring that Congress has power, under the constitution to appropriate money for the construction of roads, canals, the improvement of water courses &c. Mr. Lowndes is represented to have made an able speech in support of the constitutional power of Congress to make such an application of the public funds, in opposition to the declared opinion of the president of the United States.

SAVANNAH, March 6.

LATEST FROM AMELIA.—By the United States' brig of war Enterprize, capt. Kearney, anchored yesterday at Five Fathom, we learn that the buccaneer AURY and his crispy haired heroes left Amelia on Monday last, in company with the Enterprize. He and his suite were on board the Mexican Congress, which, together with the American Libre, were ostensibly bound to Charleston.

We likewise learn, from the same source, that an unfortunate affair occurred between midshipmen KEASBY and THORNILY, belonging to the U. States' ship John Adams. Accompanied by their seconds, they met last Saturday, on Tyger Island, in front of Fernandina, and wounded each other mortally. KEASBY died in twelve, and his antagonist in 20 hours. On Monday they were buried at St. Mary's.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 6.

Attempt at Murder.—On Sunday last, the family of John B. N. Smith, Esq. Cashier of the Bank of St. Louis, were suddenly taken ill. From the nature of the indisposition, and other circumstances, a suspicion arose of their being poisoned, which was confirmed by the physicians. A Negro man belonging to Mr. Smith was discovered to have eloped with one of the horses.---A number of the citizens immediately started in pursuit, and soon took the fellow, and confined him.

He confessed that he had put arsenick, which he had procured at a store, in a pan of sausages. Providentially he used too much, and the vomiting speedily produced assisted so much the operations of the physicians, that in a few days the intended victims were out of danger. An attempt was afterwards made to burn the jail, perhaps by some of the friends of the negro. This circumstance is but one of many to prove the necessity of a night watch, and of closer attention to slaves on the part of their masters.

General CARROLL, of Tennessee, who was second in command to general Jackson, during the invasion of this state by the British in 1814—15, arrived in town with his family, on board the steam boat Buffaloe, yesterday morning. The general had embarked for this place on board a barge, which in descending the Ohio struck on a sawyer, and was instantly severed and sunk. The general losing sight of his own danger in his anxiety to save his family, consisting of his wife, child and sister, placed them on a plank, and swimming himself, with great exertions brought them safe to land. Four men belonging to the barge, were drowned.

After wandering some time along the shore general Carroll and his family arrived at a small cabin, and the day following were taken up by the steam boat Buffaloe.

LONDON, Jan. 17.

Opening of the Sessions—Prince Regent's Speech.—The session was opened this day by commission. As soon as the Lords Commissioners had taken their seats in the House of Peers, the attendance of the Commons was commanded; and the Speaker of the House of Commons, attended by a large number of members. having obeyed the summons, a speech, of which the following is the correct account, was delivered by the Lords Commissioners.

The speech begins by announcing the continuance of his Majesty's lamented indisposition.

It then proceeds to express his royal highness's conviction that parliament will participate in the affliction which his royal highness feels in the untimely death of his only and beloved child. But under this severe visitation of Providence, it has been a great comfort to his royal highness to have received from all ranks of his Majesty's subjects the deepest assurances of the sense they entertain of the loss they have experienced, and of their participation in his parental sorrow. And in the midst of his own grief his royal highness has not been unmindful of the effect which this sorrowful occurrence must produce upon the prospects and upon the interests of this nation.

The speech then proceeds to state, that the prince regent receives from foreign powers the strongest assurance of their amicable disposition towards this country, and of their desire to maintain the general tranquility.

His royal highness has the pleasure to be able to state, that the confidence which he has always entertained in the stability of the main sources of our national prosperity, has not been disappointed.

The improvement which has occurred in the last year in every part of our internal industry, and the present situation of public credit, afforded every proof that the difficulties under which the nation was suffering were of a temporary nature. So great an alteration could not fail to take from the disaffected the chief engines which they made use of to create discontent, which produced acts of insurrection and treason, and his royal highness feels the fullest persuation that the tranquility of the country will be preserved against every effort to disturb it, by the good sense of the people and the activty of the magistracy.

The speech then proceeds to state to the house of commons, that his royal highness has ordered the estimates to be laid before them. His royal highness recommends to their consideration the situation of the income and expenditure, and he has great satisfaction in informing them, that the most important parts of the revenue have been in a progressive state of improvement

The speech then states, that his royal highness has concluded treaties with Spain and Portugal upon the subject of the slave trade, in which he has endeavored to carry into execution, as far as was in his power, the recommendation of the two houses, & he relies upon parliament to enable him to fulfil the engagements he has entered into.

The Speech then alludes to the deficiency which has long been remarked in the number of places of public worship belonging to the Established Church, compared with the population of the country, and he recommends the important subject to their consideration, fully convinced of the many benefits which we have enjoyed by the blessings of Divine Providence, & with the knowledge that the religion and morality of the people are the most certain basis of prosperity.

The Dublin papers mention the rapid increase of a contagious fever in that city, and that it excited considerable anxiety. No less than fourteen Roman Catholic Clergymen have fallen victims to it, in their humane attendance on the afflicted.

Constantinople, Nov, 25.—It is confirmed that the town of Vostissa, near Athens, was inundated by a sudden rising of the sea during a violent earthquake, and that above 5,000 of the inhabitants perished in the waves.

Venerable Tree.—At Fortingen, in Perthshire, the traveller is shown one of the greatest natural antiquities which Scotland can boast, viz, a yew tree 53 feet in circumference. Its age cannot be ascertained, but, from appearance and tradition, it must be no less then 700 or 800 years old. It is now in a decayed state, and the proprietor's burial ground lies beside it; and through the decayed part of the trunk the funeral processions pass. Its branches are still green. This is well worth seeing, and many travellers carry off pieces of the wood to foreign countries, as relics of this venerable and solitary tree.

[From the St. Louis Emigrant]

Extraordinary Perseverance.

Doctor Samuel Peters, is now waiting at Prairie des Chien, the upper military post and settlement on the Mississippi for the permission of the proper authorities to hold councils with Indians. His object is to gain their consent for him to settle the tract of land at Lake Pepin given by them to the celebrated Captain Jonathan Carver. Doctor P. is upwards of 81 years of age, he formerly lived at Hebron, Con. and is one of those who retired to England during the American revolutionary struggle, and for his loyalty received several appointments from the King. He was bishop of Con. and Chaplain to one of the British Commissioners at the first treaty of Peace, with America.

In London he met Capt. Carver (with whom he was formerly acquainted) after he had been disappointed in having his grant confirmed and so frequently deceived by the ministry that he had spent all his property and means of support in fruitless attendance upon them and had at last given up his claim in despair—Doct. P. took him home and supported him through a long and expensive series of troubles, until by the influence of his friends he brought the petition before the King in Council, who was pleased to grant it—Capt. C. was soon after taken sick and died, but before his death he assigned to Doct. P. all his right to the Land as a remuneration for his expense and trouble, requesting the Doct. to remember his children and do for them as if they were his own. For this purpose Doct. P. returned to America in 1807 and collected together the heirs of Capt. C. and offered to give them back his right to the Land or do any thing else that they might suggest as meeting their wishes and enable him to fulfil the injunctions of his friend; they concluded that it would be best for him to complete the title, as he was better qualified &c. and they would be satisfied with a Township of the lands afterwards

Doct. P. returned to England and before he was ready to return, war commenced, which kept him in England until the peace. Since this period he has been ardently employed to commence a settlement, and notwithstanding his age & infirmities, the extreme danger and almost insurmountable difficulties of the undertaking, he has undauntedly progressed as far as above stated, and so sanguine is he of ultimate success, that in a letter to the writer of this for information &c. he says—"I expect to build next summer, a saw and grist mills, dwelling house &c. at Mount Lesouille,* Township of ——, County of Mar and Territory of Petrysylvania, near La Pepin."

S.

* Lesouille is the principal chief of th Sioux and I suppose the greatest counsello of their nation.

Mr. and Mrs. Gill,

WITH gratitude acknowledge the liberal patronage they have received as teachers from the inhabitants of Pittsbugh and its vicinity and inform them, that they have removed their SEMINARY from Wood street to that commodious house lately occupied by Mr. Edgar in 3d street where Mrs. G will continue the tuition of young misses in the various branches of an English education, and hopes from the improvement of her pupils the last season, to merit a continuance of public favour.

To facilitate the progress of the young ladies and presuming it will be more congenial to parents in general: Mrs. G. will decline admitting any boys over twelve years of age.

The branches of education which will be taught are, orthography, reading, English grammar and writing in all its various branches, arithmetic plain sewing and marking—at $6 per quarter.—Also ornamental needle work, composition, drawing and painting with India ink and colours.

The terms will be made known at the school room, which will be open for the reception of scholars on the first of April or prior to that at the Wood street Seminary.

EXECUTION OF JOHN TIERNAN,

MURDER OF PATRICK CAMPBELL.

The execution of John Tiernan took place on Wednesday last (as appointed by the Governor) between the hours of twelve and one. As it was the first scene of the kind ever witnessed in this part of the country, since civilized men have occupied the soil, it excited an attention incomparably greater than it otherwise would have probably done. About eight or ten thousand persons were present, and of those, a principal part appeared to be from the country around and from the neighbouring towns. Many of them, it is said, travelled thirty or forty miles for the purpose. No one exhibited any anxiety, except in the vague, vulgar curiosity which urged them on to behold, not the victim of the laws, so much as the appearance and behaviour of the multitude which the catastrophe was sure to collect.

All doubts as to the atrocity of Tiernan's conduct (if any existed) having been removed by his last confession; which, being in broad contradiction to all his previous contradictory statements, left him without a single hold on public feeling, except what arose from the mere instinctive, animal sentiment of repugnance at the death of a fellow creature. The apathy which he had displayed at his trial—the contempt for the crowd around him—for decency—for law—for death—as well as for every thing sacred or awful, which, until a short time before his execution appeared amidst every change of his inconsistent behaviour, cut him off from almost all that natural sympathy which suffering alone would always excite: while at the same time we saw not one human being joined to him in kindred or in friendship, or situated to share in the misery and degradation of his fate.

Under such circumstances, was that poor being called forth to undergo the sentence of the law and to meet the eye of the populace, whose cold look was little calculated to bring comfort to his deeply humbled spirit. He was placed in a small uncovered carriage—escorted from the prison by the city-guards, and accompanied by the Rev. Mr. O'Brien and the Rev. Mr. O'Flinn. His hardihood, which was hitherto astonishing and savage, now entirely forsook him. We never before looked upon a countenance so haggard in health, so deathlike pale and awe-struck, yet still apparently devoid of sensibility. The sweat drops rolled down his face and spoke a mind stunned and crushed by the horror of its condition, but not otherwise legible through the torpor of his features.

On the way to the place of execution, he seemed continually engaged in conversation or prayer with the attending priests, and apparently in great contrition. The gallows was erected in the precincts of the city, and guarded by a portion of the city militia, who were drawn up around it in a hollow square, ready to receive the prisoner and his escort. At the foot of the gallows he remained about half an hour attending to prayers. He then ascended the scaffold with the sheriff and Mr. O'Brien; and, having seated himself remained there for a while employed in most fervent prayer. He appeared sunk to the lowest degree of despondency; but so strong, or so callous, were his nerves that not a finger trembled—not a feature shewed even a momentary nervous agitation.

When the period for his exit arrived, the sheriff and Mr. O'Brien shook hands with him in the most kindly manner and with great emotion. The sheriff having followed the priest to the foot of the ladder he returned again, & after reading the confession he covered the prisoner's face, and executed him with his own hands. It was said to have been in consequence of the very earnest request of Tiernan himself that he performed that duty personally. The death scene was marked by no particularity that we could observe: the culprit struggled little, and in two or three minutes seemed to be relieved from all sensation. All who were present on the melancholy occasion had the opportunity of a full view of the execution, as the declivities around the gallows form nearly a perfect amphitheatre.

We saw no tokens of regret at the poor sufferers' fate; and, although one or two females fainted, there was little or no expression of commisseration, or feeling of any kind, to be observed amongst the mass of the people. There was, as a matter of course, much display of the cant and slang of affectation and morbid sensibility, but little that showed the impressions which the real awfulness of the scene should have produced. In this country, where situations of danger, and sights of punishment and wretchedness are rare, the sensations they produce belong rather to the nerves than to the mind.

LAST CONFESSION

Of John Tiernan, under sentence of Death, for the MURDER of Patrick Campbell.

I, JOHN TIERNAN, born in Ireland, & aged fifty years, being solemnly impressed with the awful idea of presently appearing before the Supreme Judge of the universe, and answering for the many crimes which I have committed, and particularly for the one for which I have been tried, and am about to suffer an ignominious death, DO ACKNOWLEDGE, That on the morning of the sixth of December, 1817, being fired with revenge for the ill treatment I had previously received from Patrick Campbell, and particularly on the evening before, and being seduced by the evil suggestions of the devil, I did deliberately, and with full intention of killing, strike Campbell two blows on the head, with an axe, whilst the said Campbell was lying in bed; but whether he was asleep or awake at the time, I cannot tell. My only reason for witholding this, my last confession, for such a length of time, was that I still hoped for a reprieve; but now finding that such hopes were vain, & that the enormity of my crime called for a public example, in order to deter others from indulging the violence of malignant passions, and hoping that my guilt may be washed away by the blood of my merciful Saviour Jesus Christ, which cleanseth from all sin, I have freely given the foregoing statement: hoping that all good Christians, who now witness this awful catastrophe, will forgive my offence, and offer up their prayers to the throne of grace in my behalf. In hope of forgiveness from the God whom I have so much offended, and whose pardon I fervently implore, I am now ready to resign my soul to his keeping, in the firm expectation of a joyful resurrection

FOR THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE.

MR. EDITOR.

In the "Village Record" of West Chester, I have read with very great pleasure a speech delivered on the 23d of February by William H. Dillingham, Esq. before the Washington Association of Chester county. Of these birthday orations it would in general be a rare eulogium to say, that they contained any thing worthy of arresting the eye of the reader; but really the production in question combines so much vigor and purity of style—such sound principles—and there is throughout such a delightful glow of patriotic enthusiasm, that I cannot refrain from expressing a hope that you may be able to lay it entire before your readers. It is consolotary to reflect, that there are such men spread throughout our country.—A bungling attempt at criticism in one of the adjacent newspapers, shews, that this speech has one pretty decisive mark of merit—that of having aroused malevolence. This however must be expected by every rising man; but in spite of any such temporary obstacle, I cannot believe that the talents of Mr. Dillingham will long remain buried in the obscurity of a county-town.

A SUBSCRIBER

The Huntsville Republican of the 10th inst. says, that at the sale of public lands in that territory, some of the best of the land sold at 73 dollars per acre, and that the amount of sales for the last week was 1,460,000 dollars.

Legislative Expedition.—The General assembly of Rhode Island adjourned on the 7th inst. after a session of only 11 days—during which they disposed of the whole docket of 250 petitions: granted 80 petitions for the benefit of the insolvent act, and dismissed and rejected about as many more: chartered nine banks, and three insurance companies; besides transacting other business.

In the state of Rhode Island, there are 31 towns, and 28 banks!

The late Flood.—During the confusion and alarm says the Albany Gazette which frequently prevails on these occasions, a singular instance of preservation occurred. In one of the houses in which the water was rushing in powerful torrents, a woman anxious for her safety, effected her escape after several attempts. She had hardly reached a place of safety, when she recollected that her infant had been left slumbering in the cradle, in the room from which she had just escaped; terrified and almost distracted, the distressed and anxious mother returned with the view of rescuing the child; the water had filled the room, and the cradle floating on a cake of ice, found its way down the current to a place of safety; and where "nestling curious, there the infant lay" unhurt.

On examining the late information from Europe, we find that Prussia has obtained a loan from England of three millions sterling, payable in 36 years, at five per cent. The French funds are said to be upon the rise.—The Russian monarch was said to be on the eve of his departure for Moscow, probably to superintend the rebuilding of that city. In France, it appears that Talleyrand still continues a royal favorite, and has recently been promoted to new honours.——Intelligence by the way of France represents that the emperor Alexander will be enabled by his negotiations with the Persian monarch, to secure a free passage to India and the Persian gulph; and another rumor has been for some time past in circulation, that the emperor of China was impatiently awaiting a minister from Russia, at whose reception he was ready to dispense with the ceremonial of the nine prostrations.—The king of France has established a new military school, to instruct at the public expense the sons of officers who are themselves destitute of property, and who have distinguished themselves in the service of their country.—From Switzerland we hear that the cantons at the requisition of France and Austria, have decided that no publication shall be admitted of an inflammatory tendency.—We learn that Ferdinand has issued a royal ordinance, prohibiting under the penalty of transportation for ten years, the introduction of slaves into Spain, or in any other part of his territories.—It is expected that there will be an early meeting of parliament to take into consideration the question of succession—It is said that Prussia proposes to lay a heavy duty on articles of English manufacture—that a law is about to pass the German diet to establish one uniform system respecting the liberty of the press. The English papers do not seem to regard the seizure of Amelia Island as dictated by hostility to the patriots.—From Germany we learn that the government contemplate opening an outlet for the produce of Austria to the United States by the Adriatic sea, and that an Austrian consul general is to proceed to Philadelphia.—Balt. Tel.

DIFFICULTY OF APPREHENDING THE VALUE OF HIGH NUMBERS.

As very high numbers are somewhat difficult to apprehend, it may not be amiss to illustrate, by a few examples the value of the words million, billion, trillion and quadrillion:—"Suppose that a person reckons a hundred pieces in a minute, and continues to do so twelve hours in each day, he will take 14 days to reckon a million. A thousand men would take 38 years to reckon a billion. If we suppose the whole inhabitants of England and Wales have been constantly employed in counting money since the birth of our Saviour, they could not have as yet reckoned a trillion. Though we admit the earth from the creation to have been as populous as it is at present & the whole human race to have been counting money, without intermission, they could scarcely as yet have reckoned the five hundredth part of a quadrillion of pieces."—Morrison's Commercial Arithmetic, page 14.

Dr. Roberston observed, that the jokes of Dr. Johnson were not the stabs of malevolence but the rebukes of the righteous, which are like excellent oil, and break not the head. "Oil," replied Burke, "oil of vitriol."

Fourth-street ACADEMY.

THE subscribers impressed with a grateful sense of the very liberal encouragement they have experienced since their commencement as teachers of youth, take this opportunity to return sincere thanks to their friends and the public; and they pledge themselves that nothing shall be wanting on their part to facilitate the progress of those committed to their care.

Aware of the regard teachers should have to the morals and health of their pupils, they have at considerable expence fitted up separate apartments for their male and female schools, which on inspection will be found every way calculated for these objects. They have for the purpose of enabling them to pay more particular attention to their several classes engaged an assistant, and continue to teach reading, plain and ornamental writing. English grammar, history, geography with the use of globes, arithmetic, book-keeping, (by double entry) geometry and the practical branches of the mathematics.
